

Senior Essay on Sartre (Working Title)

Shen Zhou Hong St. John's College

January 27, 2022

Contents

1	Introduction	5
2	Endpage	7

1.0 Introduction

What is being? “Why are there beings at all, instead of nothing?” That was the question, presented in the words of Martin Heidegger, as the fundamental question of metaphysics (Heidegger 1). The question of being is both the broadest question, as well as the deepest – those answer must account both for “some elephant in some jungle in India, just as much as some chemical oxidation process¹ on the planet Mars.” (4) Our ability to give an adequate account of being is important, not just on the basis of some abstract, theoretical desire, but as a practical necessity too – for to understand the being of a human, is to know what is the “characteristic activity” (Aristotle 11) of a human-being.

¹First published in 1935, Martin Heidegger’s astronomical quip predated the Viking lander (and any practical investigations into the being of Martian surface chemistry) by more than 41 years.

2.0 Endpage

Bibliography

- Aristotle. Nicomachean Ethics. Ed. and trans. Roger Crisp. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2000. Web. Cambridge Texts in the History of Philosophy.
- Heidegger, Martin. Introduction to Metaphysics: New translation by Gregory Fried and Richard Polt. Translated by Gregory Fried and Richard Polt. Connecticut: Yale University Press, 11 Aug. 2000. Web. Rpt. of Einführung in die Metaphysik. Max Niemeyer Verlag, 1935.
- Sartre, Jean-Paul. Being and Nothingness: An Essay in Phenomenological Ontology. Trans. and introd. Sarah Richmond. Forew. Richard Moran. New York: Washington Square Press, 1 Sept. 2021. Web. Rpt. of L'Être et le Néant: Essai d'ontologie phénoménologique. Éditions Gallimard, 1 Jan. 1943.

Technical Notes

This essay is typeset using L^AT_EX, an Open Source document typesetting language by Donald Knuth, and version-controlled via Git. The git repository containing notes, source code, and revision history is available here:

<https://github.com/ShenZhouHong/sartre-essay>

This essay is written using the EssayTemplate, an open source L^AT_EX essay template designed for the Humanities by Shen Zhou Hong. It is available at:

<https://github.com/ShenZhouHong/EssayTemplate>

This L^AT_EX essay is also available in Microsoft Word, OpenOffice, HTML, and plain text upon request.